spoke as follows. The Compass of Masonry.

Masonry encompasses its members within an imaginary circle representing the boundary line of conduct towards God and man, beyond which they are on no occasion and under no pretext to suffer their prejudices, their interests or their passions to befray them, and teaches that while they keep themselves thus circumscribed, they cannot materially err.

Under the blazing sunlight of commercialism the world is today participating in a mad race for wealth—power. This is a materialistic age. The days of doubt of dogmas and of fears have passed away. The curtain has been rung doys upon the age of superstition. We have upon the age of superstition. We emerged from the witcheraft times a bigger and broader world. Men are now persecuted for giving speech to thought. Minds and consciences are he
